History update across loading steps

At each loading step, PIDL predictions are used to update damage and fatigue history variables. The updated history fields are stored and passed to the next loading step, ensuring path dependence across cycles.